ME

“ My mom was a friend to everyone she met, and even to strangers she met along her journey. She was the wisest, most honest person I've ever met. High's gave her five dollars too much in change back once, she returned that five dollars, even though dad told her to just keep it. She did what was right anyway. She taught me what true long-suffering is. That was one of her gifts from God. She taught me forbearance, another gift of hers. In the Word, we are made perfect in suffering. Mom has always been perfect to me, just the way she is. I will miss her severally on this earth, but I know we will see her later! She will always be full of love, and her heart never forgot. One of our very last conversations together she was still talking about her Angel. Her memories weren't gone from that dementia, only a bit jumbled, but her heart never ever forgot all her loved ones.
