“ I remember the day you were born \ud83d\ude42. As your mom and I walked the hallways of hospital waiting for you to decide to make your grand entrance. Your mom was sooo tired she could barely push. After hours (what probably seemed like days to your mom), with a stern talking to (yes by me, Mel you gotta push \ud83d\ude0a as we helped her breathe holding her legs because she was so very tired, you finally decided it was time to grace us with your beauty! You were one of the most beautiful baby girls, I ever seen! You mom blessee me with the honor of naming you ... Kyesha Nicole who we would call Ky for short. We shared the same middle name, yes very intentional, my way of always sharing a piece of me with you! You are now in Heaven enjoying all it's beauty with Lil Barq. I know your fine because he has made certain. Another Angel to care and watch out for your loved ones remaining. Take care from above of your children, mom, dad, sister and brothers. I love you Ky! Dear Heavenly Father, I ask you to wrap your arms around this precious family giving each of them the peace, strength and courage to live each day in memory of Ky, with a smile as big as she once shared with all of us. Father God, I ask that you reveal yourself to her family and friends so they feel your presence and always know you are with them, you will see them through this storm! Father God, I asked that all the strength, peace and mercy you have bestowed upon me will too grace Ky's family. In Jesus Name, Amen. Mel and Alyssa, I love you! I understand your pain and deep sadness, please know you can call me anytime when your angry, sad, confused, to cry, to vent, to talk or reminisce! Your life has forever changed, an internal sadness that no one can understand unless they live it, know the sadness you feel will never go away, but please remember even with this sadness, with the help of our Almighty Father, you will one day smile, laugh and have the energy/strength to live. My deepest condolences for your loss! Respectfully, Jeannette \u2764
